

Noiseshaper is a Vienna-based band blending reggae, soul and electronic music into a distinctive and genre-crossing sound. Founded by Axel Hirn and Florian Fleischmann in Berlin, the band has evolved from its electronic roots into an energetic live formation. Featuring UK vocalist Nyha and Clemens Handler on bass, they deliver a warm and positive soundtrack for uncertain times that combines club energy with classic songwriting. Audiences can expect warm basslines, soulful vocals and an atmosphere where concert and dancefloor merge.

Alongside their classics, Noiseshaper also perform material from their 2025 album Welcome The Unknown, which marked the band's return after a ten-year hiatus. The album features, among others, Bernard Fowler, backing vocalist of The Rolling Stones.

The story of Noiseshaper began in Berlin in the late 1990s. Emerging from the city's experimental club culture, Axel and Florian developed a sound that blended reggae, dub, house and electronica - a crossover that was still far from common at the time. Noiseshaper became part of a new wave of artists connecting Jamaican sound system culture with European electronic music.

During their Berlin and London years, Noiseshaper released several albums and singles, beginning with their 2001 debut club release The Only Redeemer on Different Drummer. The band toured clubs and festivals across Europe, collaborated with Dennis Bovell, Adrian Sherwood and Paolo Baldini, remixed Sly & Robbie and OutKast, and contributed music to Hollywood soundtracks.
